BUSINESS IS IMPROVING SAYS SECRETARY HOOVER

General Trade Trend In 1924
Was Good, U. S. Favorable
Trade Balance For Fiscal
Year $1,042,681,497, Building and Construction Also
Establish New Marks.

Business conditions during 1924 left little room for complaint on the part of the American people, Secretary Hoover declared Tuesday in the foreword to the commerce department's official history of the year's trade.

Publication of this document known as the department's year book summarizing statistics of production and distribution covering the nation's trade, coincide with announcement of foreign trade figures disclosing a balance of $1,042,681,497 in favor of the United States in the last fiscal year.

General Trend Good.

In his foreword to the year book, Hoover cited that 1924 had been marked by very complete employment of the country's working force; that agriculture had experienced "some partial recovery from three years of extreme difficulty," that transportation efficiency had been high; that buildings and construction had established new records, and that the general production and distribution of articles for consumption had been measurably satisfactory.

There were some less satisfactory elements in the business situation but the general results were held to be measurably satisfactory.

"The shipping industry shows some improvement in 1924," Hoover related "altho it has not yet reached a basis of stability. The textile industries experienced more inactivity than other manufacturing industries. The bituminous coal industry is in great difficulties, due to complex causes, partly the hold-over from excessive expansion during the war. But generally we have but few difficulties remaining which can be attributed to the effect of the war.

"Agriculture has been blessed with a shift in prices for the better, probably in a large way at least reflecting the fact that while the number of farmers in the United States has remained constant since 1914, the consumers have increased greatly. Wheat prices were no doubt helped by the subnormal crops abroad and the corn prices by crop failures in certain states.

"By and large, the average price of all agricultural produce now approximates the general level of commodity prices. Some farm products, particularly cattle, are still below the normal relationship with other commodities, but the shift is constantly in the direction of equality and gives hope for still better conditions for agriculture.

"Our foreign trade for the (calendar) year shows an increase over 1923 of 10 per cent in exports at $4,591,000,000 and a decrease of five per cent in imports at $3,611,000,000. The most permanently significant change in our export movement was an increase of 7 1/2 per cent in manufactured goods as compared with the previous year. Our merchandise exports exceeded our imports by $980,000,000.

A large fraction of the heavy merchandise balance in our favor was taken care of by our loans to foreign countries of nearly $1,000,000,000. We imported on balance about $258,000,000 of gold and there was some cross current European capital toward the United States in the flight from the unstable currencies of certain countries.

Bucyrus, O.—The county grand jury Tuesday indicted Vernon Bowers, 29, for first degree murder.

Mansfield, O.—The congestion at the Ohio Reformatory for men here is to be alleviated by handing out paroles freely, T. C. Jenkins, superintendent, announced.

Jenkins sent out letters to the judges and prosecutors of the state asking them to recommend as many inmates for paroles as possible.

Wellsville, O., July 14, (UP).—Frank Blackburn, president of the city council, has appointed a committee of three to investigate the death of Ralph Davis, 15, Wellsville boy, at the Boys' Industrial School at Lancaster. The council claims to have information indicating Davis was flogged to death. The state authorities, however, claim he died a natural death having been in a hospital for ten days with intestinal disease.

The names of the committee members and the nature of the probe are to be kept secret.

Would Link London to New York by Air in 46 Hours

London.—Plans for an air service from London to New York in 46 hours, and from London to San Francisco in four days were described here to Maj. Gen. Sir Sefton Brancker, director of civil aviation.

The project, which somewhat resembles the French plan described recently in the Christian Science Monitor for boating airdromes in mid-Atlantic, proposes rattlike ships about 800 feet long by 120 feet wide, which would remain unanchored some 400 miles apart. Seaplanes alighting alongside would refuel through pipes. At first it is intended to use machines carrying ten passengers at £125 each for a trip to New York.

HIGHER COURT WILL HEAR THE PHILLIPS CASE

Judge Brooks E. Shell Monday morning in the Fairfield county courts affirmed the decision of Probate Judge Van A. Snider in the case of Jacob Young against William Phillips.

The controversy arose over the estate of the late William Phillips, uncle of the William Phillips involved in the law suit. The elder William Phillips was formerly a resident of East Ringgold, in Pickaway county. He was never married but boarded with a woman in East Ringgold paying ten cents per meal. In 1918 she raised his board to twenty-five cents per meal, the old gentleman claimed he could not pay this amount and left the boarding house. This event caused him to move to Fairfield county later, where he resided until his death. He was eighty-four years old when he died and his estate is valued at $60,000. There are over 150 heirs to this estate.

William Phillips filed for the administration of the estate of his uncle in Fairfield county and Jacob Young filed for the administration of the estate in Pickaway county. According to the decision handed down by Judge Snider and affirmed by Judge Shell the estate will be administered in Fairfield county.

Judge Adkins appointed Jacob Young and Flora Murray, administrators of the estate. Since the above decision, the attorneys, Barton Walters, George G. Adkins and C. A. Weldon will take the case up to a higher court.

Fined $100 Each.

William Kerns and Elmer Stevens, of Lockbourne, who were placed under arrest Sunday morning by Sheriff Young on the charge of kidnapping three young girls at Ashville, last Saturday night were up before Judge Adkins in juvenile court Tuesday afternoon.

The girls in the case, Ora Lindsey, aged 16, Melva Lindsey, aged 15, and their cousin, Evaline Clark, aged 15, testified that they had accepted an invitation to ride in the auto of the two strange young men and that they remained out all night, and finally jumped out of the auto on the Walnut creek pike and ran all the way to their homes. The young men were caught by the irate father and grandfather of the girls, after the auto had been wrecked at a corner of the road.

Judge Adkins fined the young men $100 each for contributing to the delinquency of the young girls and they are to stand committed until the fine and costs are paid.

SCOPES TRIAL WANDERS INTO STRANGE PATH

True Issue at Dayton, Tennessee is no More Than Constitutional One.

Dayton, Tennessee's great day has arrived and the much-heralded Scopes trial is under way. In spite of Mr. Bryan's challenge to the defense to prove the truth or falsity of the evolutionary theory, and the defense's acceptance of the challenge, that great question is entirely apart from the issue. To determine the truth or falsity of a scientific theory is beyond the power of any court, just as it is beyond any legislature. Long after lawmakers, judges and juries have made their various decisions and passed on, scientific truth and falsity will continue as they are, sublimely unaffected.

The true issue at Dayton is no more nor less than the constitutional one. Has a legislature the power to limit public teaching in accordance with the whim or prejudice of its members? Is not such limitation in conflict with the constitution of the United States and of the state of Tennessee? Is not freedom to teach established truth or scientifically recognized theory in public schools guaranteed by implication in the Bill of Rights, that basic charter of American freedom? These, and these only, are the true questions involved. Digressions into religious dogma and belief, or scientific truth and falsity, are all out of place and beside the issue.

The indictment of Mr. Scopes, quaintly humorous in its solemn legal language on such a subject, charges that the defendant "did unlawfully and wilfully teach in the public schools of Rhea county, Tennessee * * * certain theory and theories that deny the story of the divine creation of man as taught in the Bible, and did teach instead thereof that man has descended from a lower order of animals * * * contrary to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state.

Was John T. Scopes acting unlawfully in teaching evolution? Is the law under which he was indicted valid, or in conflict with the national and state constitutions? Those are the only questions directly involved and legally in point. The rest is digression. There is no titanic conflict between science and religion, as Mr. Bryan and his followers conceive. As to the religious and scientific beliefs and issues, which have no logical place whatever in the trial, John Edgerton, of Nashville, Tennessee, president of the National association of Manufacturers, writes wisely as follows:

"A science that conflicts with or denies the essential truths comprehended by Holy Writ and interpreted to man by the Author thru the history of human experience is not true science, and any religion that denies the evolutionary principle in all life is not true religion!"

IT ISN'T MUCH OF A STORY
By FRANK WALL

ONCE upon a time John Storm put his little ship out to sea and was wrecked. It really isn't much of a story. The only interesting point is that it was his good qualities rather than his bad ones that brought him to disaster.

In the first place he was a perfect fool where women were concerned. Then again, he was altogether too much in earnest where his heart was involved. And lastly, he was of a passionate temperament. The last two qualities had been wished on him by his ancestors and the first was just natural to him.

He lived in one of those nondescript rooming houses in the Bohemian center of New York, and he had two charming neighbors. On one side of him there was Mary Content, engaged in the "legitimate line" of theatrical work, an elusive piece of loveliness, gay and tender by turns and nothing long, save where her heart was concerned. In that respect she had all of Storm's tremendous quality of earnestness, and something over. One might surmise that she would be slow to give her heart, but staunch as a rock when it was given; but in the event of disillusionment she would be adamant.

Marie Ledoux, the vaudeville artiste who occupied the room on the other side, was of another clay. Beautiful in a full-fledged fashion, with deep, slumberous eyes that could flame at a mere idle impulse, she was a magnificent animal. There are women that way. In her case, one might surmise that her heart would be moved easily, as a leaf is blown before every passing wind. One might surmise, too, that if her vanity were touched she would play with a man as a cat plays with a mouse before striking the life out of it.

She usually returned from her theater about midnight, and had given herself a standing invitation to call in at Storm's room for a cup of coffee. That is where the first scene in the little comedy was staged: Storm's room, cheaply furnished in rooming-house style, small table in center, with coffee cups, a chair on either side; Storm and Marie discovered seated.

Marie is telling of her triumphs, from which an experienced hearer would deduct the usual trade discount; but Storm, not being experienced, swallows it hook, line and sinker. Yet he has his limitations, and they are reached when she passes on to lament the quality of the femininity in the rooming house.

"I haven't a rival here," she says complacently.
Perhaps he sits up a little more erect at that. Perhaps something intangible but opposing in the look he gives her stirs her easy vanity. "I'm lovelier than any one here," she says.

"With one exception," he says quietly, putting his head in the lion's mouth, as it were.
"Without any exception."

"You are lovelier than any other woman in this house with one exception," he says, a little unsteadily. "But that exception makes all the rest of you as nothing to me."

Marie laughs a little and changes the subject. They talk of indifferent matters, while her eyes regard him with a strange intentness. It stirs him profoundly. Then she rises to go and in that moment she lifts her face slowly to his. Her eyes are gleaming like pools of fire. Her lips move sinuously.

"I'm lovelier than she is," she whispers.

"No," he says doggedly. "You are lovely, but she is more lovely to me."

She throws an unsteadiness into her voice that shakes him for a moment. "Say I'm more lovely than she is," she says again. "Say it . . . say it . . . quickly . . . say yes . . ."

"No," he says harshly; "I won't."

And she only smiles at his harshness.

She continues to call at his room every night, but she always talks of casual matters. But about a week later she invents a secret to tell him and leans forward to whisper it so that her hair brushes warmly against his face; and then, at something she sees in his eyes, she holds him swiftly.

"I'm lovelier than she is," she whispers.

He thrusts her roughly from him and she falls back in her chair. Her eyes are closed and he draws nearer, full of remorse.

"Ah," he says, "I've hurt you."

Her eyes open slowly, flashing full into his. "Say I'm lovelier than she is," she murmurs; and he stares at her with a kind of wildness, and then turns and runs out of the room. And again she smiles at her own thoughts.

He goes back to his own room. Perhaps Marie, when she arrives, sees the sign for which she has been waiting; perhaps it is just a chance shot on her part. She comes in more quietly than usual, and in some strange fashion the passion that is in him for the other girl leaps forward to meet Marie. He stands up. He is losing his control and he knows it; and she knows it.

"Ah," he says. "You are lovely."

"Kiss me!" she whispers suddenly.

He doesn't answer, just crushes his lips on hers. And in that moment, staring over her shoulder, he sees the other girl standing at the door. She has come to give him her answer.

It really isn't much of a story, except that it happens to be true.

Not Bothered
"Yes, he's ruined; but still, poverty is no disgrace, is it?" "He doesn't owe you anything either, then?"

Tragic Ending
Augustus Thomas, the famous playwright, said at a dinner at the Hotel Astor in New York:
"Producers claim that only the plays with happy endings can succeed. But no play has a happy ending."
His hearers looked at Mr. Thomas in amazement.
"No play has a happy ending," he repeated. "On the contrary, it runs on and on, and at last it ends tragically in some one-horse town, with the entire road company stranded and nary the price of a box stew amongst the lot of them."

Similar Gait
Out on the edge of the desert a rancher owned a popular-priced car, which he had painted white. He entered a near-by village one day, slightly madder than a wet hen.
"Look at my car!" he said. "Shot plumb full of holes!"
"Meet some bandits?" chorused the corner loafers.
"No!" he snorted. "As I was drivin' in to town some blame' tenderfoot hunters mistook it for a jackrabbit."
—American Legion Weekly.

New Idea in Spectacles
No longer need a clothing store salesman take a suit to the window to show the prospective customer the effect in daylight, or even turn on a special light, says a note from Science Service. Instead, he will soon be able to hand the customer a pair of daylight spectacles, which have been invented by Dr. Hermann Weiss of Vienna. Already they have come into wide use in laboratories in the textile, paper and dye industries, where it is often necessary to judge the color of solutions. They are of blue glass, which absorbs some of the yellow rays in which the ordinary incandescent lamp is rich, but which are not present in such abundance in sunlight.

Grave Kept Lighted
The strangest memorial in honor of the dead has been put into effect by a resident of Hartford, Conn., who has had two electric lights placed over his wife's grave. These lights are turned on 24 hours daily and the bereaved husband expects to create a fund to keep them burning for all time.

Gray Satin Dress for Late Spring or Summer

Things to Know About Proper Care of Gloves

How long can you wear a pair of gloves? If you frequently find that your gloves "just split in no time," and that you must, therefore, replenish your supply more often than you feel you should, perhaps your answer is dependent on another question: "What kind of care do you give them?"

This is likely to be the case, particularly when your gloves are of leather, for leather gloves depend both for their attractive appearance and their durability on the care that they get. Care in putting them on and taking them off—by drawing them backward by the wrist—is the first requirement for long-lived gloves. Pull them gently into shape after you take them off, and lay them, right side out and carefully folded, in a box or drawer. If they are light colored it is well to protect them from dust by wrapping them in tissue paper; and you will find that blue paper helps to keep white gloves from becoming yellow. If your gloves are at all moist from perspiration let them dry before you wear them.

Many women make the mistake of putting their "best" gloves away and bringing them out only on state occasions. While, of course, it is not desirable to wear your fine, delicate gloves for rough "every-day" wear, on the other hand, you will find that gloves left too long unworn will become dried out and will have a tendency to crack as you put them on. This is because leather needs oil, and the natural oil of the hand helps to keep them in condition.

In the same way, it is well to rub a bit of some pure oil on heavy leather gloves when you are not using them.

Clean your non-washable leather gloves in gasoline, or remove small spots with art gum or ether. Use lukewarm water, preferably soft, and a mild soap, for your washable leather gloves. Chromo-tanned leather gloves may be washed in hot water, but they should be dried slowly in a natural current of air.

Wash your silk gloves in lukewarm water, using a mild soap, and pressing them in a towel and pull them into shape when they are partly dry.

Be sure you use tepid water on your chamoisette gloves; and never iron them. You can wash your cotton gloves just as you would any other cotton material. Wash your woolen gloves carefully in tepid water, using a little soap in the rinse water, and pressing the water out of them, rather than wringing or twisting them.

New Tub Silks Are of Particular Interest

Materials which a decade ago came under the classification of "silk" are now divided into groups distinct and different. There are certain silks that are primarily intended for the smart little informal costumes worn at resorts. Others are definitely meant to be used for suits and tailored ensembles. A third class takes in the silken fabrics for formal afternoon frocks and for evening gowns. According to fashion's ruling, one may wear silk for practically every occasion and always be costumed in perfect taste.

The new tub silks are of particular interest both because of their practical qualities and their beauty. In the plain fabrics the range of colors is wide and takes in every shade from the most delicate pastel tone to more vivid shades of blue and yellow. Those which feature designs show extraordinary versatility. Narrow candy stripes, wide Roman effects, bold plaids and occasional two-toned checks are to be found in these materials, which may be laundered most successfully. Their colors are strikingly effective and reveal progress that has been made in design and in the knowledge and use of color within the past decade.

KEEPING WELL

DESTROYING AN ANCIENT ENEMY

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

MALARIA is one of the oldest and most dangerous enemies of the human race. It existed long before the beginnings of history. Records of it are found among the earliest writings of man. Greek, Roman and Assyrian writers describe it so accurately that it can be recognized as the same disease which we have today.

The Greeks, who developed the arts, sciences and philosophies of the Golden Age of Pericles, were fair-haired, light-skinned and blue-eyed. Grecian soldiers brought malaria back from their foreign campaigns in Persia and Macedonia. The disease killed so many Greeks that they were gradually replaced by the darker races from the southeast, who were the forefathers of the Greeks of today.

The famous Roman legions, sent to conquer the barbarians, brought malaria back to Rome, where it has been prevalent ever since.

Malaria does not come in epidemics like yellow fever, bubonic plague and Asiatic cholera, but once installed, it exists all the time, gradually undermining the strength and vitality of its victims.

For many centuries, it was known that it existed in low, swampy localities where pools of stagnant water abounded. It was always especially prevalent in the tropics.

Ross, the great English authority on malaria, says that Africa should have been called the Malarial continent instead of the Dark continent, since it was malaria which kept it from being explored and developed for centuries.

Up to the middle of the Seventeenth century, no treatment for this disease had been discovered. In 1638, the Countess del Cinchona, wife of the viceroy of Peru, developed malaria. Her father, a Jesuit, told her of a new medicine which the natives used. Malaria was common in Peru. The natives had learned to cure themselves of the disease by chewing the bark of a native tree. The missionary got some of the bark from the natives and offered it to the countess. Her physician urged her not to take it, saying that it savored of witchcraft, but the father superior of the convent blessed the powder to remove the curse. The lady took it and found that it cured her fever.

The countess sent some of the bark back to Europe by a returning missionary. It soon came into general use. It was called Jesuits' bark or Peruvian bark, later, Cinchona, after the countess who first used it. As malarial patients were generally anemic, it was combined with iron and given in wine. One can read in old histories, biographies and novels that doctors of those days gave their patients "steel, wine and bark"—a prescription very much like our present-day elixir of iron and quinine.

We now know all about the cause of malaria, but quinine is still used in its treatment.

Dogs Save Master from Fall Over Cliff to Death

Bakersfield, Cal.—H. G. Hobbright of this city probably owes his life to his two dogs, a Siberian stag hound and a fox terrier. Hobbright was returning from a ranch Sunday morning and stopped to fish. He slipped and struck his head on a boulder and fell partly over a cliff. When W. P. Cummings of Kansas City, Mo., arrived, guided by the fox terrier, he found the stag hound dragging Hobbright from the brink by his trouser leg. The dogs would not allow Cummings to administer first aid until Hobbright spoke to them.

NUTMEG IN DEMAND FOR MANY PURPOSES

A nutmeg tree will yield from 1,000 to 10,000 nuts a year. All parts of the fruit are in demand for culinary purposes. In Singapore the natives salt the husks, and in drinking-saloons they are supplied for the purpose of creating thirst. A delicious preserve is also prepared from the husks.

The nutmeg is employed in medicine as a carminative and stimulant, and fat from the nut—the so-called nutmeg butter—is used as an application for rheumatism.

It contains from 3 to 8 per cent of a volatile oil, and the substance myristicin, which possesses narcotic properties.

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material that is lasting, and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. Will you let me help you select the memorial for your lot. Call at show room. NO AGENTS.

Rooster Could Count

A class in experimental psychology at the University of Chicago has found that a rooster can count. Kernels of corn were arranged in rows on the floor, every third kernel being tacked down. The rooster discovered this and passed up the stationary kernels. Then the third kernels were loosened and the rooster was set at his task. He skipped them until his foot struck one, when, with a chuckle, he returned and ate all the kernels.

PYTHAN CASTLEProminent Men Victims
of Kindly Deceptions

Shortly before Lord Curzon died, a special copy of the London Daily Graphic was printed with a view to concealing from him the progress of his illness. For this unique copy the bulletin issued by his doctors was withdrawn and another much more favorable substituted.

This kind of deception is not rare. For five days in succession a postal subscriber to a certain morning newspaper received a special copy which, unlike all the others, did not contain a report of the trial of his son, the Vancouver Province says.

The subscriber, who was bedridden, read only this journal and the suppression was made at the request of his family, to hide from him the disgrace his son had brought on his name. He was thus kept in ignorance of the matter up to his death, which took place about six months afterward.

Some years ago a one-copy edition of a magazine was prepared. A young woman sent a travel article to the editor and shortly afterward she was taken ill. As she expressed a keen desire to see her work in print, her parents communicated with the publishers and as a result her article ostensibly appeared in the next issue, though in fact it was in only one copy. This copy was sent to her home, together with a check which was actually met by her father.

An amusing trick was played on Lord Robertson, familiarly known as "Peter." He sent a copy of his poem "Italy," a mediocre production, to his friend Lockhart, asking him to review it or have it reviewed in the Quarterly Review. The great critic was unwilling to comply with this request, because he could not praise it honestly, and did not want to offend "Peter" by slating it. Ultimately, however, he wrote a scathing review of the poem and, having had one copy printed and inserted as if it were part of the Quarterly, caused it to be forwarded to Robertson at Edinburgh. In it occurred the famous epitaph on his lordship:

Here lies the Christian, Judge, and poet Peter,
Who broke the laws of God and man
and Meter.

Only a short time ago a living man of letters was hoaxed in a similar manner, and it was not until legal proceedings were started against the editor and publishers of the presumably erring organ of public opinion that he discovered the article had not been published in the usual way.

BABY TRUMPET
OF ELEPHANT
IN COLUMBUSRepublican Party in Columbus Born on Town Street
Seventy Years Ago.

The G. O. P. elephant, ancient tusk of the political arena, emitted his first baby trumpet in Ohio—a trumpet of defiance to his strongest present-day rival, the Democratic donkey—just 70 years ago Monday—July 13, 1855.

The Democrats were sitting on top of the world then, but the trumpet of the new-born infant proved more than a blast of defiance—it was the precursor of dark days to come for the followers of Thomas Jefferson and "Old Hickory" Jackson.

The meeting at which the Republican party in Ohio was born was held in Columbus at the old Town street Methodist Episcopal church and it bore more than political portent. It heralded the gathering of the ominous clouds which a few years later burst forth into the storm which drenched the nation in blood.

The party was one of protest born of the slavery issue, but it was not at that time an abolitionist movement. Its prime object was to prevent the further spread of slavery into territory where the institution was prohibited by the terms of the Missouri compromise.

The same year the baby elephant issued its challenge Salmon B. Chase was swept into office as governor, carrying an entire state ticket with him. A solid congressional delegation was elected and when the returns were in it was found that the Republicans held a 29-6 grip on the Ohio senate and outnumbered their Democratic rivals in the house, 78 to 34.

Members of all the existing parties the Whigs, the Free Soilers, the "Know-nothings" a secret society embracing among its tenets opposition to Roman Catholicism and unrestricted admission of foreigners into the United States and even Democrats who were opposed to slavery, went to swell the G. O. P. ranks.

The Republican party in Ohio antedated even the national organization which was not formed until January 15, 1856, in Pittsburgh.

July 13, was elected as the convention date because it was the anniversary of the adoption of the ordinance in 1787, prohibiting slavery in the northwest territory.

Steamers Replace Junks

The passing of the man-drawn "rickshaws" of the Orient is being followed by the gradual disappearance of the junks from the crowded rivers. Light-draft steamboats, mostly of American design, are being put on the great interior waterways. For centuries the yellow rivers of China have known nothing of transportation power other than lateen sail, oars and sweeps handled by hundreds of coolies slowly dragging the vessels up the gorges of the swift-running streams. The Yangtze river alone in 1920 had 18,700 junks operating on its thousands of miles of soft-colored meandering.

The change at times has created ill-feeling on the part of the junk operators because large crews of coolies are thrown out of jobs every time a steamboat is bought to replace junks.—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Apricots by the Yard.

There seems to be nothing in Damascus they cannot turn into a sweet of some kind. The sweetstuffs of Damascus are famous; they are really candied fruits. As the climate is hot, every form of plum, apricot, peach, melon, grape, greenage and nut grows. These are soaked in sugar preparations, and when served they are most luscious. Put in tins or tories they last for years; but when freshly made they are perfectly delicious, especially the walnuts. For packing, round common wooden boxes are used, quaintly stenciled in Arabic design, and these boxes of dried fruit are sent all over the world, but of course nothing is ever so good when it has been packed as it is when it is freshly made.

MANY DEMAND MORE
NATIONAL HOLIDAYS

Would Make America Lead
in Days of Rest.

Washington.—From several quarters come an increasing number of suggestions that new public holidays be added to the already fairly long list. Wilson followers, Hamilton admirers, friends of Roosevelt and many others, actuated by motives of hero-worship, have advocated that one day of each year be set aside to commemorate the memory of three American leaders.

If all these intended subjects were thus honored America would lead as a nation of holidays. Considering its age it already leads. For such countries as England, France, Italy and Germany are much older and have many more heroes to honor, many more excuses for a day of rest. Yet England has but eight, France but twelve and Italy ten. In France no holidays are officially dedicated to honor heroes.

In a strict sense of the word, the United States has no national legal holidays. Thanksgiving might be counted one exception to this rule, as the President's proclamation virtually makes it so. In a legal sense, however, only the District of Columbia is duty-bound to observe it.

By Common Consent.

The same procedure holds in regard to all of the so-called national holidays. By common consent, certain of them are set aside by all of the state legislatures and observed. If the legislatures care to stray from the flock, that is their privilege.

Since legal and public holidays are to all practical purposes inseparable, no endeavor is made in the tabulation of holidays by states which follows, to distinguish among them: Alabama, 14; Arizona, 13; Arkansas, 14; California, 14; Colorado, 13; District of Columbia, 7; Connecticut, 11; Delaware, 11; Florida, 14; Georgia, 10; Idaho, 11; Illinois, 11; Indiana, 11; Iowa, 9; Kansas, 11; Kentucky, 11; Massachusetts, 13; Louisiana, 11; Maine, 12; Maryland, 13; Michigan, 10; Minnesota, 11; Mississippi, 10; Missouri, 13; Montana, 13; Nebraska, 13; Nevada, 12; New Hampshire, 11; New Jersey, 13; New Mexico, 9; New York, 12 (inclusive of Spring and Fall primary, not legal); North Carolina, 13; North Dakota, 13; Ohio, 11; Oklahoma, 10; Oregon, 12; Pennsylvania, 12; South Carolina, 11; South Dakota, 11; Texas, 13; Utah, 12; Vermont, 12; Virginia, 11; Washington, 11; West Virginia, 10; Wisconsin, 10; Wyoming, 11.

From this total, one may draw an average of twelve national holidays for the country at large. What the northern, eastern and western states consider a national holiday is not always considered so by the South. Washington's birthday is everywhere observed, but by many Southern states the birthday of Lincoln is absent from the holiday calendar. Instead, Lee's birthday on January 19 is honored, and that of Jefferson Davis on June 3. Shrove Tuesday is more generally designated as a holiday by the legislatures of the South than the North. Jefferson's birthday on April 13 is already on many of the Southern calendars, though as yet on none of those in Northern states.

No Disagreement.

Independence day, Washington's birthday, Labor day, Columbus day, Decoration day, the Armistice, Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's—on these there seems to be no disagreement among the states.

In the request for more days on which to honor our national heroes, other countries read an interesting phase of American character. We do so much rushing about over here, are invariably geared at such a high speed that foreigners may well conclude we need more holidays than they do. England is easy-going throughout the year, so only needs eight. Italy can worry along with ten official holidays, though of course, the real life is honey-combed with local fete-days, mostly of a religious nature, and overnight political celebrations. France and Germany, with many more events in history to commemorate, have many more excuses for resting than has the United States, which finds 12 in the year sufficient.

Out of 365 days, the average American citizen now has a total of 101 for recreation. Fifty-two of these days are his Sundays, 26 of them his Saturday afternoons. The remaining number includes 12 holidays and an allowance of 11 days for his annual vacation, this figure excluding his two usual Sundays and Saturday afternoons off.

Veterans on Pension List
Drop 6,464 in 6 Months

Washington.—War veterans on government pension rolls, exclusive of the World War, decreased in number during the last six months from 522,007 to 515,543, the Interior department announced recently, the figures representing a reduction of 6,464.

Civil war pensioners decreased by 10,631, but Spanish-American war veterans increased by 8,804 and those of the Indian war increased by three. Only 18 veterans of the Mexican war remain on the rolls.

Although no veterans of the War of 1812 are on the list, there still remain 22 widow pensioners of this conflict, compared with 30 six months ago.

Pensioners of the regular army service increased, 13 soldiers and 45 widows being added to the rolls.

SIDELIGHTS
ON EVOLUTION
CONTROVERSY

Monkeys, Babies and Pop
Furnish Much of the Entertainment at Trial.

Dayton, Tenn., July 14, (UP).—The Scopes trial may unwittingly be the occasion of dispelling a cherished northern illusion about southern cooking. Those fortunate enough to be boarding with private families are all right, but in the town's lunch rooms fresh vegetables seem to be taboo and everything gets a coat of grease that makes the visitors pray for a speedy end to the trial.

Dogs roam thru the court room during the trial, sniffing about under the benches until some one sends them yelping out with well directed boots.

This is only one sign of the informality at Dayton. Pop bottles are emptied whenever a spectator gets thirsty and the empty bottles go flopping on the floor at unexpected intervals.

Messenger boys wander in and out with that apparent aimlessness peculiar to a messenger boy. The floor is a little of telegraph blanks and crumpled copy paper from the press tables.

Babies are allowed in the court room and they wait unadmonished. Trains roar by every now and then. Vendors hawk "Nice soft cushions ten cents."

The air is blue with smoke in the court room, until the judge's gavel bangs.

The Life of Christ, a motion picture has arrived in town. It advertises itself in much the same manner as the tent shows which pulled up stakes and left here in disgust.

Dayton's first real monkey hit town last night. It was brought from a circus at Atlanta and created a real sensation. It is a young chimpanzee about 2 1/2 feet tall. Dressed as a man and carrying a cane, it was paraded down Main street, with a huge following. Later it was driven around the town in its cage.

The most interested women in the court room are Mrs. Bryan and Mrs. Darrow. Mrs. Bryan, an elderly lady and an invalid, occupies a wheel chair on the prosecutor's side near her husband. Mrs. Darrow has a seat at the defense table next to John T. Scopes.

Now that the jurors are excluded from the court room in order not to get certain arguments they gather around the loud speakers on the outside of the court room and tune in on a bootlegged version, a delicate question in American jurisprudence arises. That is what the Scopes jury did yesterday.

The "Sewing" club of Muhlenberg township held their regular meeting June 30. The roll call was answered by telling one way to increase the membership. Some of the suggestions were as follows: "Telling something about their club," Louise Carpenter; "Invite them to their meetings," Pauline Fuller; "Enter contest," Violet Grice; "Tell about club tour," Florence Hill; "Invite to demonstrations," Christena Heeter; "Make good of money to be put in bank" Blanche Heeter.

Six members and one visitor were present. The visitor was Mrs. H. T. Hill.

Christena Heeter and Louise Carpenter are on the demonstrating team for the first year and Violet Grice and Pauline Fuller for the second year work.

The refreshment committee was Blanche Heeter and Florence Hill. They served ice cream, cake and chocolate drops.

The King Snake's Dinner.

A "Companion boy" who lived in Missouri, and who has been reading the paper since he was a little shaver, writes to tell us what he knows about the cannibalistic habits of snakes. As my brothers and I were cooking hay in a clover field, he writes, we found a king snake basking in the July sun; he was too lazy and full to move. Being curious to know what he had devoured, we cut him open. To our astonishment we found that he contained a black snake 28 inches long, more than one inch longer than himself; and inside the black snake we found a mouse and a grasshopper. The head and neck of the black snake were purple and indicated that the king snake had killed it. —Youth's Companion.

SAYS COLDS COST
BILLION A YEAR

Doctor Declares America Has 100,000,000 of Them.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Dr. Beaman Douglass of New York, in an address before the annual convention of the Laryngological, Rhinological and Otolaryngological society, in the Ambassador hotel here, said there were 100,000,000 colds a year in the United States, causing a loss in time from work of $1,000,000,000, at an average of three days each at $5 a day.

"If we men," he declared, "were to appear on the street in midwinter wearing dancing slippers, silk hose, trousers rolled to our knees and our shirts turned down to the apex of our breastbone, we should most certainly die of pneumonia, but the ladies of today dress that way and yet suffer less from colds than men. This is because the women are out more and become hardened."

Doctor Douglass stated that dry air in homes during the winter is largely responsible for the number of colds.

"When a person goes from the open air, with its natural moistness, into his home," he said, "the dry air there makes the membranes of the nose crack and cold bacteria find lodgment, causing a head cold."

WISE MAN FROM WEST

Dr. William W. Peet of Minneapolis, Minn., chairman of the Near East Relief in Constantinople, has sailed for the United States after forty years of philanthropic service in the Near East. He went to Constantinople in 1885 as head of the American Board of Foreign Missions, and has been confidential adviser to every American diplomat in the Near East since the days of Gen. Lew Wallace. Among the natives he was known as the "Wise Man From the West."

Student Economy Causes
Oxford Tailors to Close

Oxford, England.—Notwithstanding the rage among Oxford students for "elephant leg" trousers, which are considerably more loose and roomy than the bloomer effect worn by the United States navy sailors, the boys here are buying fewer clothes than formerly. Three long-established tailoring firms, one of which had been in business nearly a century, have gone out of business lately because, it was said, they could not make a living.

The boys haven't got the money they had in other days to spend for clothes, aver the tailors. The students wear knickerbockers a great deal, one or two suits for the season, and cannot afford to have a different suit for every occasion, as a great many did before the war.

James J. Eads

Los Angeles, Calif.—C. E. Jennings is no fake hypnotist, according to guards at the Los Angeles county jail. Arrested on a check charge, Jennings was placed in a cell. There were several "toughs" in jail and jailers soon noticed these had developed sweet dispositions. Some even hopped and jumped and went to sleep for Jennings, who revealed that several years ago he was the principal in a hypnotism sketch on a vaudeville circuit.

Norfolk Wall Safe
Yields Valued Relics

Norfolk, Va.—Two commissions engraved on sheep-skin parchments, the first signed by President John Adams, and the second by President Thomas Jefferson, making Jonathan Cowdery a surgeon's mate and a full surgeon in the United States navy, have been uncovered by Dr. John C. Sleet of this city, who will make an attempt to have the documents restored to their lawful owners. The first commission bears the date of 1800 and the second 1808.

The documents include a Masonic diploma from Washington lodge No. 26, making Mr. Cowdery a Master Mason, and another from the Hudson (N. Y.) lodge making him a Mark Master. The papers were found in a steel case hidden in an old brick wall of a house under repairs.

Reasonable

Colonel Roosevelt told a war story at an Albany reception. "A doughboy," he said, "had just got back home from the war, and he was lunching in a cafeteria when a dear old lady in the next chair to his own leaned over across her pie and said: 'I, too, have a soldier son, young man, and a lucky one at that. Would you believe it? My boy went through the war without a scratch.' 'Gee, lady,' said the doughboy, 'spill us the name of his insect powder, will ye?'"

True Progress

The only progress which is really effective depends not upon the bounty of nature but upon the energy of man.

A System of Farming That Brings Health and Prosperity

Every farm, regardless of the method of farming practiced or of the crops raised, should have at least a few good milk cows to provide

- (1) Enough milk, cream and butter for home use;
- (2) Enough skim-milk to raise some calves, pigs and chickens;
- (3) Enough cream or butter to sell to pay, in part or entirely, current living expenses.

This plan has been a "life-saver" for thousands of farmers, especially during the hard times of the past two years. It insures a living, at least, and often other income besides.

Such a plan pays best with a De Laval Cream Separator. It soon pays for itself—and skims cleaner, lasts longer and is easier to operate and clean than any other.

Incubator Useful in Hatching Geese

Machines Have Gradually
Come Into Use Where
Fowls Are Raised.

For many years after incubators came into general practice they were not used for the hatching of geese, but they have gradually come into use
where geese are raised in large numbers. The general requirements for successful incubation of hen's eggs are needed in hatching geese eggs. In addition the majority of operators believe that they require more drying
out in the early part of the hatch and
more cooling than hen's eggs.

Required Temperature.

The temperature required does not need to be so high but no change
needs to be made in this regard if the eggs are given more cooling. During the last part of the hatch it is generally necessary to supply moisture.
Some advocate dipping the eggs, others
sprinkling and others supplying the moisture to the machine. One of the main reasons for the need of additional moisture at that time is so that
the shell and membranes will not stick to the gosling when it is trying to get out of the shell.

Some adjustments will need to be made in the thermometer as the thickness of the goose eggs will place them
higher in the incubator and therefore in a slightly higher temperature unless an allowance is made for it. An inch in height will usually make a difference of a degree in the temperature.

Hatch Slow Under Hens.

Goslings will hatch out slower under hens or in an incubator than under geese. However, where attention is paid to proper cooling of the eggs and
a proper supply of moisture, there should be no trouble in getting a successful hatch. The beginner will sometimes become uneasy over this delay in getting out of the shell and attempt to help the goslings. This should not be done except in occasional cases
where one or more goslings are much
later than the others in hatching.
Even then extreme care should be taken in removing the shell bit by bit
and stopping at the least indication of bleeding. Usually the bird that cannot get out of the shell is not worth saving
and if the goslings are given plenty
of time and are supplied with moisture so that the material of the shell
will not stick to the body, the big majority will come out successfully.

Wide Market Opened for Capons of High Quality

On the Eastern market buyers are bidding from 30 to 35 cents per pound
for capons. This opens up a wide market for breeders of heavy chickens. Capons are making strong competition for turkeys on many of the markets on account of the high quality of their meat. Then, too, some consumers want a larger bird than the ordinary fowl.

The capon is more easily raised on most farms than turkeys. The birds
grow rapidly and the caponizing operation is not difficult to learn. The instruments can be purchased from $2.50 up, depending largely upon how much nickel plating there is on the instruments. The cheaper sets will do the work in a satisfactory manner and will last if they are given proper attention.

A capon will usually grow two pounds heavier than if left in the natural state. The selling price is considerably stronger so that the total returns are generally from three to four times that of ordinary cockerels sold on the market. There does not seem to be much danger of an oversupply
of capons, so that it forms a market
outlet that a good many breeders
should seriously consider.

Fowls Need Protein to Keep on Producing Eggs

Many farm flocks get little or no
protein in the winter and as a result
are overfat and make a poor production. Farm hens are often given a whole carcass to feed in one month
and no meat the next. As a result they are thrown out of condition and often
are poisoned by spoiled meat.

There are three ways in which animal protein can be secured. A steady supply is essential. Rabbits or dead farm animals when available can be cooked and ground or chopped up,
dried and put in a box where hens can eat when they want. Skim milk or buttermilk can be put to no more profitable use on the farm than in producing winter eggs. Where a box of meat or a supply of milk are available all of the time, it may not be necessary to put meat scraps in the mash, but if there is a shortage of these it will pay
to buy meat scraps.

Road Pushes on Campaign for Efficiency and Peace

Roads rule the world—not kings nor congresses, not courts nor constables,
not ships nor soldiers. The road is the only royal line in a democracy, the
only legislature that never changes,
the only court that never sleeps, the
only army that never quits, the first
aid to the redemption of any nation,
the exodus from stagnation in any society, the call from savagery in any
tribe, the high priest of prosperity,
after the order of Malchisedec, without beginning of days or end of life.
The road is unripe in every war, and when the new map is made, it simply pushes on its great campaign of help,
hope, brotherhood, efficiency and
peace.

STRANGE WORLD

Three news items of the year 1925 seemed of slight importance as they appeared separately in print, but they became almost startling when grouped. The British Governor of Burma rode 134 miles through a dense jungle in a vain effort to induce the Naga tribes to give up their human sacrifices. A French official in New Guinea found several villages where cannibalism prevailed. And in Nepal the Maharajah has set aside a large sum to eradicate slavery in his dominions.

It was not so many years ago that slavery was abolished in this country, but cannibalism and human sacrifice seem to belong to the very dawn of history. It seems almost incredible that they should have persisted into an age when civilization has rid itself of so many old cruelties.

The items are painful reminders of the slowness with which progress is made. And they are reminders, too, that this globe in which we live is not quite so small a place and so thoroughly explored as some have imagined. There are no new continents to find, but there is still opportunity for the adventurous. There are some queer places left for the men and women who dare venture a little aside from the beaten trails in Africa and Asia and some of the great islands in the Pacific.—Boston Post.

WID GIVES LOW DOWN ON MOVIES

Talking to Gloria Swanson the other night and was surprised to learn that she's almost through with a new movie. That girl's one of the most likeable personalities in the game. She's not only a real artist but she's got a lotta good plain common sense that keeps her feet on the ground and makes it possible to think in commercial terms of the box office. Incidentally that very boyish bob is very becoming.

Much was expected of Georgia Hale, the young lady who had the supreme opportunity of recent years when Chaplin slipped her into "The Gold Rush" after the present Mrs. Chaplin had been removed because of marriage, the coming of an heir, a threatened lawsuit and other trifles. Miss Hale missed her chance. Charlie gave her some marvelous scenes to do and truly the opportunities were magnificent, but she didn't "click" as the saying goes and so hundreds of young ladies in Hollywood can rightfully say, "Oh, if I had only been given a shot at that part." Well, it's all in a lifetime. Maybe some other year, girls.

Story of the Built-Well Home
(CHAPTER 2)

Upon the foundation goes the frame-work. Of course everybody knows this; but the frame must be of such size and character as will properly carry any load required governed by the expanse.

A good grade of No. 1 common joist are being used in this home. They are spaced only 16 inches apart which will make very firm floors as the expanse is not great. This is where in cheap building an inferior grades of material is often used as it will later all be covered. Also some of the timber that should properly be used is left out or spaced too far apart, thus weakening the strength of the building. These are the class of buildings that usually go over in a wind storm or sag and become crooked soon after being built.

We are Building a Good Frame In Our Built-Well Home.

On the joist we are laying a good sound sheathing lumber eight inches in width on which will later be laid a hardwood finished floor.

It has been the custom to sheath the outside walls of good homes with No. 2 boards, but here we introduce an inovation.

The Walls of the Built-Well Home are to be Sheathed with Celetex or Insulating Lumber as it is called.

This will brace the building more than boards besides really making the house cooler in Summer and warmer in Winter. We are determined to have the most comfortable home in Circleville both Winter and Summer, and with the least consumption of ice in Summer and coal in Winter.

This Celetex is now being applied and we hope our friends will see it and ask us any questions they like about it.

Next week more will be told of this wonderful insulating lumber and please remember that Celetex is in stock at the yards of the Pickaway County Lumber Company, East Main Street.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Many Wedded Students Succeed in University

Denver, Colo.—That wives are an aid and not a drawback on grades is evidenced by the neat appearance of the law students' notebooks, according to an article in the Denver Clarion of the University of Denver.

"A married man," the article reads, "in an English university is rare, one in a high school in America is usually suspended, and men who take brides while attending American universities are few. Accordingly, when a freshman enters the law school at Denver he is somewhat astonished when he learns how many of its students are married."

It has been found that out of 100 students who now attend law school 27 have stood at the matrimonial altar. The seniors have been there most frequently. Out of a class of 35, 14 have wives. The junior class, numbering about 35, boasts of 9 married, while 4 of a freshman class of 30 have become husbands.

"LOST" TARs FOUND FOR ANXIOUS KIN

Seamen's Institute Locates 1,905 in Five Years.

New York.—Every seaport town or city has its "port of missing men." It is a common thing for seamen to drop out of sight thereby causing anxiety to friends and relatives. This is true especially of seamen who sail on roving commissions, changing from vessel to vessel and shipping anew from port to port. Yet few of these lost seamen go down with their ships. A large majority of them are simply lost because being a happy-go-lucky lot they neglect to keep their friends informed of their whereabouts.

So many inquiries concerning lost seamen came to the Seamen's Church Institute at 25 South street that in January, 1920, the institute found it advisable to establish a "missing men's department," and the work of locating such men has been entrusted to Mrs. Janet Roper, who is known to followers of the sea in every port however remote and small in the world. She is the house mother of the institute and to hundreds of seamen of many nationalities she is affectionately known as "Mother."

The institute receives about 100 inquiries a month concerning seamen for whom anxiety is felt. And these inquiries are gaining in number because the work of the missing department has been increasing to such an extent that it has become international in scope. Letters are received frequently from distant ports and inland villages of Europe asking for news of rovers of the Seven Seas. Some of these communications come from Holland and Great Britain, and many from parents of American boys from country towns and hamlets.

Inquiries in Every Port.

As soon as these communications are received the work of looking up the absent ones begins. Each month the institute publishes a bulletin of men reported as missing, and these bulletins go to every port in the world. The various foreign consulates in the city which receive inquiries requesting them to locate this or that man send such inquiries to the institute if the man is a seaman. And seamen themselves assist in trying to locate the whereabouts of members of their fraternity.

From June to October the institute gives a series of concerts and entertainments and at these affairs the names of missing men are flashed upon a screen. Since there are usually between 500 and 600 men who follow the sea for a livelihood at these entertainments, the bulletins on the screen are read in the course of a month by many seamen.

At one of these concerts a man saw his name flashed among the missing. After the entertainment he sought Mrs. Roper and confided to her that his brother might be looking for him. He said that 17 years ago he had said good-by to his brother at the Battery. He was about to embark on a cruise and he liked the sea so well that he had shipped on other cruises. When he returned he was unable to find his brother or any trace of his whereabouts. Mrs. Roper finally located his missing brother in Oakland, Cal.

When a letter is received from an anxious mother or relative the letter is acknowledged.

Found His Mother.

A youth appealed to the American consul in a foreign city to help him find his mother, who had been lost to him for four years. The institute was asked to help locate the mother. After much work the mother was found. She was in destitute circumstances. The youth, who was earning a good livelihood, was overjoyed at finding her. Other youths feel the urge of the sea and run away from home, not realizing the anxiety they cause their parents. On becoming remorseful they write to their parents, only to discover that they have moved from their former home, without leaving a forwarding address behind.

The foregoing are some of the reasons that cause seamen to lose trace of their families. Seamen forget to write home. Others leave home in a pique. Two brothers had a falling out over the possession of a shirt and lost sight of each other during the late war. At the conclusion of the war they made an effort to find each other but without success. Both of them were seamen and when the institute was appealed to it discovered that they had been living within four city blocks of each other. For some reason neither had happened to encounter the other on the street. They were delighted at being brought together again. They had been lost to each other for a year.

Another instance was that of a boy who was to enter a school. He had a secret yearning for the sea and he decided that it, despite his mother's opposition, promised more lively adventure than the somber schoolroom. He made up his mind to run away on the day he was to begin his studies. He was big for his age and he managed to get a job on a ship. He had not been at sea long when he was found by the institute and returned to his mother. He found more work than adventure on the sea and he was only too glad to return to his mother and his studies. His case is typical of others.

Since it was established the "missing men's department" has located 1,905 men reported as missing. Among this number were captains, mates, engineers, carpenters and ordinary seamen. They belonged to all nationalities.

PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS ASCENDING

BUSINESS IS IMPROVING SAYS SECRETARY HOOVER

General Trade Trend In 1924
Was Good, U. S. Favorable
Trade Balance For Fiscal
Year $1,042,681,497, Building and Construction Also
Establish New Marks.

Publication of this document known as the department's year book summarizing statistics of production and distribution covering the nation's trade, coincide with announcement of foreign trade figures disclosing a balance of $1,042,681,497 in favor of the United States in the last fiscal year.

General Trend Good.
In his foreword to the year book, Hoover cited that 1924 had been marked by very complete employment of the country's working force; that agriculture had experienced "some partial recovery from three years of extreme difficulty," that transportation efficiency had been high; that buildings and construction had established new records, and that the general production and distribution of articles for consumption had been measurably satisfactory.

There were some less satisfactory elements in the business situation but the general results were held to be measurably satisfactory.

"The shipping industry shows some improvement in 1924," Hoover related "altho it has not yet reached a basis of stability. The textile industries experienced more inactivity than other manufacturing industries. The bituminous coal industry is in great difficulties, due to complex causes, partly the hold-over from excessive expansion during the war. But generally we have but few difficulties remaining which can be attributed to the effect of the war."

"Agriculture has been blessed with a shift in prices for the better, probably in a large way at least reflecting the fact that while the number of farmers in the United States has remained constant since 1914, the consumers have increased greatly. Wheat prices were no doubt helped by the subnormal crops abroad and the corn prices by crop failures in certain states."

"By and large, the average price of all agricultural produce now approximates the general level of commodity prices. Some farm products, particularly cattle, are still below the normal relationship with other commodities, but the shift is constantly in the direction of equality and gives hope for still better conditions for agriculture."

"Our foreign trade for the (calendar) year shows an increase over 1923 of 10 per cent in exports at $4,591,000,000 and a decrease of five per cent in imports at $3,611,000,000. The most permanently significant change in our export movement was an increase of 7½ per cent in manufactured goods as compared with the previous year. Our merchandise exports exceeded our imports by $980,000,000."

A large fraction of the heavy merchandise balance in our favor was taken care of by our loans to foreign countries of nearly $1,000,000,000. We imported on balance about $258,000,000 of gold and there was some cross current European capital toward the United States in the flight from the unstable currencies of certain countries.

Bucyrus, O.—The county grand jury Tuesday indicted Vernon Bowers, 29, for first degree murder.

Bowers is accused of shooting his sweetheart, Miss Bessie Singery, 22, to death when she refused to accompany him on an auto trip because he had been drinking.

Since the shooting Bowers' wife, who lives in Cincinnati, has visited him in jail and offered to help him.

Mansfield, O.—The congestion at the Ohio Reformatory for men here is to be alleviated by handing out paroles freely, T. C. Jenkins, superintendent, announced.

Jenkins sent out letters to the judges and prosecutors of the state asking them to recommend as many inmates for paroles as possible.

Wellsville, O., July 14, (UP).—Frank Blackburn, president of the city council, has appointed a committee of three to investigate the death of Ralph Davis, 15, Wellsville boy, at the Boys' Industrial School at Lancaster. The council claims to have information indicating Davis was flogged to death. The state authorities, however, claim he died a natural death having been in a hospital for ten days with intestinal disease.

The names of the committee members and the nature of the probe are to be kept secret.

Would Link London to New York by Air in 46 Hours

London.—Plans for an air service from London to New York in 46 hours, and from London to San Francisco in four days were described here to Maj. Gen. Sir Sefton Brance, director of civil aviation.

The project, which somewhat resembles the French plan described recently in the Christian Science Monitor for boating airdromes in mid-Atlantic, proposes ratlike ships about 800 feet long by 120 feet wide, which would remain unanchored some 400 miles apart. Seaplanes alighting alongside would refuel through pipes. At first it is intended to use machines carrying ten passengers at $125 each for a trip to New York.

HIGHER COURT WILL HEAR THE PHILLIPS CASE

Judge Brooks E. Shell Monday morning in the Fairfield county courts affirmed the decision of Probate Judge Van A. Snider in the case of Jacob Young against William Phillips.

The controversy arose over the estate of the late William Phillips, uncle of the William Phillips involved in the law suit. The elder William Phillips was formerly a resident of East Ringgold, in Pickaway county. He was never married but boarded with a woman in East Ringgold paying ten cents per meal. In 1918 she raised his board to twenty-five cents per meal, the old gentleman claimed he could not pay this amount and left the boarding house. This event caused him to move to Fairfield county later, where he resided until his death. He was eighty-four years old when he died and his estate is valued at $60,000. There are over 150 heirs to this estate.

William Phillips filed for the administration of the estate of his uncle in Fairfield county and Jacob Young filed for the administration of the estate in Pickaway county. According to the decision handed down by Judge Snider and affirmed by Judge Shell the estate will be administered in Fairfield county.

Judge Adkins appointed Jacob Young and Flora Murray, administrators of the estate. Since the above decision, the attorneys, Barton Walters, George G. Adkins and C. A. Weldon will take the case up to a higher court.

The girls in the case, Ora Lindsey, aged 16, Melva Lindsey, aged 15, and their cousin, Evaline Clark, aged 15, testified that they had accepted an invitation to ride in the auto of the two strange young men and that they remained out all night, and finally jumped out of the auto on the Walnut creek pike and ran all the way to their homes. The young men were caught by the irate father and grandfather of the girls, after the auto had been wrecked at a corner of the road.

Judge Adkins fined the young men $100 each for contributing to the delinquency of the young girls and they are to stand committed until the fine and costs are paid.

SCOPES TRIAL WANDERS INTO STRANGE PATH

True Issue at Dayton, Tennessee is no More Than Constitutional One.

Dayton, Tennessee's great day has arrived and the much-heralded Scopes trial is under way. In spite of Mr. Bryan's challenge to the defense to prove the truth or falsity of the evolutionary theory, and the defense's acceptance of the challenge, that great question is entirely apart from the issue. To determine the truth or falsity of a scientific theory is beyond the power of any court, just as it is beyond any legislature. Long after lawmakers, judges and juries have made their various decisions and passed on, scientific truth and falsity will continue as they are, sublimely unaffected.

The true issue at Dayton is no more nor less than the constitutional one. Has a legislature the power to limit public teaching in accordance with the whim or prejudice of its members? Is not such limitation in conflict with the constitution of the United States and of the state of Tennessee? Is not freedom to teach established truth or scientifically recognized theory in public schools guaranteed by implication in the Bill of Rights, that basic charter of American freedom? These, and these only, are the true questions involved. Digressions into religious dogma and belief, or scientific truth and falsity, are all out of place and beside the issue.

The indictment of Mr. Scopes, quaintly humorous in its solemn legal language on such a subject, charges that the defendant "did unlawfully and wilfully teach in the public schools of Rhea county, Tennessee * * * certain theory and theories that deny the story of the divine creation of man as taught in the Bible, and did teach instead thereof that man has descended from a lower order of animals * * * contrary to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state."

Was John T. Scopes acting unlawfully in teaching evolution? Is the law under which he was indicted valid, or in conflict with the national and state constitutions? Those are the only questions directly involved and legally in point. The rest is digression. There is no titanic conflict between science and religion, as Mr. Bryan and his followers conceive. As to the religious and scientific beliefs and issues, which have no logical place whatever in the trial, John Edgerton, of Nashville, Tennessee, president of the National association of Manufacturers, writes wisely as follows:

"A science that conflicts with or denies the essential truths comprehended by Holy Writ and interpreted to man by the Author thru the history of human experience is not true science, and any religion that denies the evolutionary principle in all life is not true religion!"

IT ISN'T MUCH OF A STORY

By FRANK WALL

ONCE upon a time John Storm put his little ship out to sea and was wrecked. It really isn't much of a story. The only interesting point is that it was his good qualities rather than his bad ones that brought him to disaster.

In the first place he was a perfect fool where women were concerned. Then again, he was altogether too much in earnest where his heart was involved. And lastly, he was of a passionate temperament. The last two qualities had been wished on him by his ancestors and the first was just natural to him.

He lived in one of those nondescript rooming houses in the Bohemian center of New York, and he had two charming neighbors. On one side of him there was Mary Content, engaged in the "legitimate line" of theatrical work, an elusive piece of loveliness, gay and tender by turns and nothing long, save where her heart was concerned. In that respect she had all of Storm's tremendous quality of earnestness, and something over. One might surmise that she would be slow to give her heart, but staunch as a rock when it was given; but in the event of disillusionment she would be adamant.

Marie Ledoux, the vaudeville artiste who occupied the room on the other side, was of another clay. Beautiful in a full-fledged fashion, with deep, slumberous eyes that could flame at a mere idle impulse, she was a magnificent animal. There are women that way. In her case, one might surmise that her heart would be moved easily, as a leaf is blown before every passing wind. One might surmise, too, that if her vanity were touched she would play with a man as a cat plays with a mouse before striking the life out of it.

She usually returned from her theater about midnight, and had given herself a standing invitation to call in at Storm's room for a cup of coffee. That is where the first scene in the little comedy was staged: Storm's room, cheaply furnished in rooming-house style, small table in center, with coffee cups, a chair on either side: Storm and Marie discovered seated.

Marie is telling of her triumphs, from which an experienced hearer would deduct the usual trade discount; but Storm, not being experienced, swallows it hook, line and sinker. Yet he has his limitations, and they are reached when she passes on to lament the quality of the femininity in the rooming house.

"I haven't a rival here," she says complacently.

Perhaps he sits up a little more erect at that. Perhaps something intangible but opposing in the look he gives her stirs her easy vanity. "I'm lovelier than any one here," she says. "With one exception," he says quietly, putting his head in the lion's mouth, as it were.

"Without any exception."
"You are lovelier than any other woman in this house with one exception," he says, a little unsteadily. "But that exception makes all the rest of you as nothing to me."

Marie laughs a little and changes the subject. They talk of indifferent matters, while her eyes regard him with a strange intentness. It stirs him profoundly. Then she rises to go and in that moment she lifts her face slowly to his. Her eyes are gleaming like pools of fire. Her lips move sinuously.

"I'm lovelier than she is," she whispers.

"No," he says doggedly. "You are lovely, but she is more lovely to me."

She throws an unsteadiness into her voice that shakes him for a moment. "Say I'm more lovely than she is," she says again; "Say it . . . say it . . . quickly . . . say yes . . ."

"No," he says harshly; "I won't."

And she only smiles at his harshness.

She continues to call at his room every night, but she always talks of casual matters. But about a week later she invents a secret to tell him and leans forward to whisper it so that her hair brushes warmly against his face; and then, at something she sees in his eyes, she holds him swiftly.

"I'm lovelier than she is," she whispers.

He thrusts her roughly from him and she falls back in her chair. Her eyes are closed and he draws nearer, full of remorse.

"Ah," he says, "I've hurt you."

Her eyes open slowly, flashing full into his. "Say I'm lovelier than she is," she murmurs; and he stares at her with a kind of wildness, and then turns and runs out of the room. And again she smiles at her own thoughts.

He goes back to his own room. Perhaps Marie, when she arrives, sees the sign for which she has been waiting; perhaps it is just a chance shot on her part. She comes in more quietly than usual, and in some strange fashion the passion that is in him for the other girl leaps forward to meet Marie. He stands up. He is losing his control and he knows it; and she knows it.

"Ah," he says. "You are lovely."

"Kiss me!" she whispers suddenly.

He doesn't answer, just crushes his lips on hers. And in that moment, staring over her shoulder, he sees the other girl standing at the door. She has come to give him her answer.

It really isn't much of a story, except that it happens to be true.

Not Bothered

"Yes, he's ruined; but still, poverty is no disgrace, is it?" "He doesn't owe you anything either, then?"

Tragic Ending

Augustus Thomas, the famous playwright, said at a dinner at the Hotel Astor in New York:

"Producers claim that only the plays with happy endings can succeed. But no play has a happy ending."

His hearers looked at Mr. Thomas in amazement.

"No play has a happy ending," he repeated. "On the contrary, it runs on and on, and at last it ends tragically in some one-horse town, with the entire road company stranded and nary the price of a box stew amongst the lot of them."

Similar Gait

Out on the edge of the desert a rancher owned a popular-priced car, which he had painted white. He entered a near-by village one day, slightly madder than a wet hen.

"Look at my car!" he said. "Shot plumb full of holes!"

"Meet some bandits?" chorused the corner loafers.

"No!" he snorted. "As I was drivin' in to town some blame' tenderfoot hunters mistook it for a jackrabbit." —American Legion Weekly.

New Idea in Spectacles

No longer need a clothing store salesman take a suit to the window to show the prospective customer the effect in daylight, or even turn on a special light, says a note from Science Service. Instead, he will soon be able to hand the customer a pair of daylight spectacles, which have been invented by Dr. Hermann Weiss of Vienna. Already they have come into wide use in laboratories in the textile, paper and dye industries, where it is often necessary to judge the color of solutions. They are of blue glass, which absorbs some of the yellow rays in which the ordinary incandescent lamp is rich, but which are not present in such abundance in sunlight.

Grave Kept Lighted

The strangest memorial in honor of the dead has been put into effect by a resident of Hartford, Conn., who has had two electric lights placed over his wife's grave. These lights are turned on 24 hours daily and the bereaved husband expects to create a fund to keep them burning for all time.

Things to Know About Proper Care of Gloves

How long can you wear a pair of gloves?
If you frequently find that your gloves "just split in no time," and that you must, therefore, replenish your supply more often than you feel you should, perhaps your answer is dependent on another question: "What kind of care do you give them?"
This is likely to be the case, particularly when your gloves are of leather, for leather gloves depend both for their attractive appearance and their durability on the care that they get. Care in putting them on and taking them off—by drawing them backward by the wrist—is the first requirement for long-lived gloves. Pull them gently into shape after you take them off, and lay them, right side out and carefully folded, in a box or drawer. If they are light colored it is well to protect them from dust by wrapping them in tissue paper; and you will find that blue paper helps to keep white gloves from becoming yellow. If your gloves are at all moist from perspiration let them dry before you wear them.
Many women make the mistake of putting their "best" gloves away and bringing them out only on state occasions. While, of course, it is not desirable to wear your fine, delicate gloves for rough "every-day" wear, on the other hand, you will find that gloves left too long unworn will become dried out and will have a tendency to crack as you put them on. This is because leather needs oil, and the natural oil of the hand helps to keep them in condition.
In the same way, it is well to rub a bit of some pure oil on heavy leather gloves when you are not using them.
Clean your non-washable leather gloves in gasoline, or remove small spots with art gum or ether. Use lukewarm water, preferably soft, and a mild soap, for your washable leather gloves. Chromo-tanned leather gloves may be washed in hot water, but they should be dried slowly in a natural current of air.
Wash your silk gloves in luke-warm water, using a mild soap, and pressing them in a towel and pull them into shape when they are partly dry.
Be sure you use tepid water on your chamoisette gloves; and never iron them. You can wash your cotton gloves just as you would any other cotton material. Wash your woolen gloves carefully in tepid water, using a little soap in the rinse water, and pressing the water out of them, rather than wringing or twisting them.

New Tub Silks Are of Particular Interest
Materials which a decade ago came under the classification of "silk" are now divided into groups distinct and different. There are certain silks that are primarily intended for the smart little informal costumes worn at resorts. Others are definitely meant to be used for suits and tailored ensembles. A third class takes in the silken fabrics for formal afternoon frocks and for evening gowns. According to fashion's ruling, one may wear silk for practically every occasion and always be costumed in perfect taste.
The new tub silks are of particular interest both because of their practical qualities and their beauty. In the plain fabrics the range of colors is wide and takes in every shade from the most delicate pastel tone to more vivid shades of blue and yellow. Those which feature designs show extraordinary versatility. Narrow candy stripes, wide Roman effects, bold plaids and occasional two-toned checks are to be found in these materials, which may be laundered most successfully. Their colors are strikingly effective and reveal progress that has been made in design and in the knowledge and use of color within the past decade.

KEEPING WELL

DESTROYING AN ANCIENT ENEMY
DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

MALARIA is one of the oldest and most dangerous enemies of the human race. It existed long before the beginnings of history. Records of it are found among the earliest writings of man. Greek, Roman and Assyrian writers describe it so accurately that it can be recognized as the same disease which we have today.

The Greeks, who developed the arts, sciences and philosophies of the Golden Age of Pericles, were fair-haired, light-skinned and blue-eyed. Grecian soldiers brought malaria back from their foreign campaigns in Persia and Macedonia. The disease killed so many Greeks that they were gradually replaced by the darker races from the southeast, who were the forefathers of the Greeks of today.

The famous Roman legions, sent to conquer the barbarians, brought malaria back to Rome, where it has been prevalent ever since.

Malaria does not come in epidemics like yellow fever, bubonic plague and Asiatic cholera, but once installed, it exists all the time, gradually undermining the strength and vitality of its victims.

For many centuries, it was known that it existed in low, swampy localities where pools of stagnant water abounded. It was always especially prevalent in the tropics.

Ross, the great English authority on malaria, says that Africa should have been called the Malarial continent instead of the Dark continent, since it was malaria which kept it from being explored and developed for centuries.

Up to the middle of the Seventeenth century, no treatment for this disease had been discovered. In 1638, the Countess del Cinchon, wife of the viceroy of Peru, developed malaria. Her father confessor, a Jesuit, told her of a new medicine which the natives used. Malaria was common in Peru. The natives had learned to cure themselves of the disease by chewing the bark of a native tree. The missionary got some of the bark from the natives and offered it to the countess. Her physician urged her not to take it, saying that it savored of witchcraft, but the father superior of the convent blessed the powder to remove the curse. The lady took it and found that it cured her fever. The countess sent some of the bark back to Europe by a returning missionary. It soon came into general use. It was called Jesuits' bark or Peruvian bark, later, Cinchona, after the countess who first used it. As malarial patients were generally anemic, it was combined with iron and given in wine. One can read in old histories, biographies and novels that doctors of those days gave their patients "steel, wine and bark"—a prescription very much like our present-day elixir of iron and quinine.

We now know all about the cause of malaria, but quinine is still used in its treatment.

Dogs Save Master from Fall Over Cliff to Death

Bakersfield, Cal.—H. G. Hobright of this city probably owes his life to his two dogs, a Siberian stag hound and a fox terrier. Hobright was returning from a ranch Sunday morning and stopped to fish. He slipped and struck his head on a boulder and fell partly over a cliff. When W. P. Cummings of Kansas City, Mo., arrived, guided by the fox terrier, he found the stag hound dragging Hobright from the brink by his trouser leg. The dogs would not allow Cummings to administer first aid until Hobright spoke to them.

NUTMEG IN DEMAND FOR MANY PURPOSES

A nutmeg tree will yield from 1,000 to 10,000 nuts a year. All parts of the fruit are in demand for culinary purposes. In Singapore the natives salt the husks, and in drinking-saloons they are supplied for the purpose of creating thirst. A delicious preserve is also prepared from the husks.

The nutmeg is employed in medicine as a carminative and stimulant, and fat from the nut—the so-called nutmeg butter—is used as an application for rheumatism.

It contains from 3 to 8 per cent of a volatile oil, and the substance myristicin, which possesses narcotic properties.

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material that is lasting, and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. Will you let me help you select the memorial for your lot. Call at show room. NO AGENTS.

Rooster Could Count

A class in experimental psychology at the University of Chicago has found that a rooster can count. Kernels of corn were arranged in rows on the floor, every third kernel being tacked down. The rooster discovered this and passed up the stationary kernels. Then the third kernels were loosened and the rooster was set at his task. He skipped them until his foot struck one, when, with a chuckle, he returned and ate all the kernels.

PYTHIAN CASTLEProminent Men Victims
of Kindly Deceptions

Shortly before Lord Curzon died, a special copy of the London Daily Graphic was printed with a view to concealing from him the progress of his illness. For this unique copy the bulletin issued by his doctors was withdrawn and another much more favorable substituted.

This kind of deception is not rare. For five days in succession a postal subscriber to a certain morning newspaper received a special copy which, unlike all the others, did not contain a report of the trial of his son, the Vancouver Province says.

The subscriber, who was bedridden, read only this journal and the suppression was made at the request of his family, to hide from him the disgrace his son had brought on his name. He was thus kept in ignorance of the matter up to his death, which took place about six months afterward.

Some years ago a one-copy edition of a magazine was prepared. A young woman sent a travel article to the editor and shortly afterward she was taken ill. As she expressed a keen desire to see her work in print, her parents communicated with the publishers and as a result her article ostensibly appeared in the next issue, though in fact it was in only one copy. This copy was sent to her home, together with a check which was actually met by her father.

An amusing trick was played on Lord Robertson, familiarly known as "Peter." He sent a copy of his poem "Italy," a mediocre production, to his friend Lockhart, asking him to review it or have it reviewed in the Quarterly Review. The great critic was unwilling to comply with this request, because he could not praise it honestly, and did not want to offend "Peter" by slating it. Ultimately, however, he wrote a scathing review of the poem and, having had one copy printed and inserted as if it were part of the Quarterly, caused it to be forwarded to Robertson at Edinburgh. In it occurred the famous epitaph on his lordship:

Here lies the Christian, Judge, and poet Peter,
Who broke the laws of God and man
and Meter.

Only a short time ago a living man of letters was hoaxed in a similar manner, and it was not until legal proceedings were started against the editor and publishers of the presumably erroneous organ of public opinion that he discovered the article had not been published in the usual way.

BABY TRUMPET
OF ELEPHANT
IN COLUMBUS*Republican Party in Columbus Born on Town Street
Seventy Years Ago.

The G. O. P. elephant, ancient tusk of the political arena, emitted his first baby trumpet in Ohio—a trumpet of defiance to his strongest present-day rival, the Democratic donkey—just 70 years ago Monday—July 13, 1855.

The Democrats were sitting on top of the world then, but the trumpet of the new-born infant proved more than a blast of defiance—it was the precursor of dark days to come for the followers of Thomas Jefferson and "Old Hickory" Jackson.

The meeting at which the Republican party in Ohio was born was held in Columbus at the old Town street Methodist Episcopal church and it bore more than political portent. It heralded the gathering of the ominous clouds which a few years later burst forth into the storm which drenched the nation in blood.

The party was one of protest born of the slavery issue, but it was not at that time an abolitionist movement. Its prime object was to prevent the further spread of slavery into territory where the institution was prohibited by the terms of the Missouri compromise.

The same year the baby elephant issued its challenge Salmon B. Chase was swept into office as governor, carrying an entire state ticket with him. A solid congressional delegation was elected and when the returns were in it was found that the Republicans held a 29-6 grip on the Ohio senate and outnumbered their Democratic rivals in the house, 78 to 34.

Members of all the existing parties the Whigs, the Free Soilers, the "Knownothings" a secret society embracing among its tenets opposition to Roman Catholicism and unrestricted admission of foreigners into the United States and even Democrats who were opposed to slavery, went to swell the G. O. P. ranks.

The Republican party in Ohio antedated even the national organization which was not formed until January 15, 1856, in Pittsburgh.

July 13, was elected as the convention date because it was the anniversary of the adoption of the ordinance in 1787, prohibiting slavery in the northwest territory.

CRIST
DEPT. STORE*Steamers Replace Junks

The passing of the man-drawn "rickshaws" of the Orient is being followed by the gradual disappearance of the junks from the crowded rivers. Light-draft steamboats, mostly of American design, are being put on the great interior waterways. For centuries the yellow rivers of China have known nothing of transportation power other than lateen sail, oars and sweeps handled by hundreds of coolies slowly dragging the vessels up the gorges of the swift-running streams. The Yangtze river alone in 1920 had 18,700 junks operating on its thousands of miles of soft-colored meandering.

The change at times has created ill-feeling on the part of the junk operators because large crews of coolies are thrown out of jobs every time a steamboat is bought to replace junks.—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Telephone's Beginning

Apricots by the Yard.

There seems to be nothing in Damascus they cannot turn into a sweet of some kind. The sweetstuffs of Damascus are famous; they are really candied fruits. As the climate is hot, every form of plum, apricot, peach, melon, grape, greengage and nut grows. These are soaked in sugar preparations, and when served they are most luscious. Put in tins or bottles they last for years; but when freshly made they are perfectly delicious, especially the walnuts. For packing, round common wooden boxes are used, quaintly stencilled in Arabic design, and these boxes of dried fruit are sent all over the world, but of course nothing is ever so good when it has been packed as it is when it is freshly made.

"Courtesy will prevent accidents." Of course, and if a study is made of the growing number of accidents a fairly accurate idea may be obtained of about how much courtesy there is running around loose.—Detroit Free Press.

A heavy load is often easier carried by taking a fresh hold on it. Likewise past-due bills and debts can be made less burdensome by settling them thru the popular City Loan Plan. A loan account with this company has released the pressure on many a family and given life a new meaning. And paying back a City Loan account is so easy and simple by comparison that it becomes an actual pleasure.

MANY DEMAND MORE NATIONAL HOLIDAYS
Would Make America Lead in Days of Rest.

Washington.—From several quarters come an increasing number of suggestions that new public holidays be added to the already fairly long list. Wilson followers, Hamilton admirers, friends of Roosevelt and many others, actuated by motives of hero-worship, have advocated that one day of each year be set aside to commemorate the memory of three American leaders. If all these intended subjects were thus honored America would lead as a nation of holidays. Considering its age it already leads. For such countries as England, France, Italy and Germany are much older and have many more heroes to honor, many more excuses for a day of rest. Yet England has but eight, France but twelve and Italy ten. In France no holidays are officially dedicated to honor heroes. In a strict sense of the word, the United States has no national legal holidays. Thanksgiving might be counted one exception to this rule, as the President's proclamation virtually makes it so. In a legal sense, however, only the District of Columbia is duty-bound to observe it.

By Common Consent.
The same procedure holds in regard to all of the so-called national holidays. By common consent, certain of them are set aside by all of the state legislatures and observed. If the legislatures care to stray from the flock, that is their privilege. Since legal and public holidays are to all practical purposes inseparable, no endeavor is made in the tabulation of holidays by states which follows, to distinguish among them: Alabama, 14; Arizona, 13; Arkansas, 14; California, 14; Colorado, 13; District of Columbia, 7; Connecticut, 11; Delaware, 11; Florida, 14; Georgia, 10; Idaho, 11; Illinois, 11; Indiana, 11; Iowa, 9; Kansas, 11; Kentucky, 11; Massachusetts, 13; Louisiana, 11; Maine, 12; Maryland, 13; Michigan, 10; Minnesota, 11; Mississippi, 10; Missouri, 13; Montana, 13; Nebraska, 13; Nevada, 12; New Hampshire, 11; New Jersey, 13; New Mexico, 9; New York, 12 (inclusive of Spring and Fall primary, not legal); North Carolina, 13; North Dakota, 13; Ohio, 11; Oklahoma, 10; Oregon, 12; Pennsylvania, 12; South Carolina, 11; South Dakota, 11; Texas, 13; Utah, 12; Vermont, 12; Virginia, 11; Washington, 11; West Virginia, 10; Wisconsin, 10; Wyoming, 11.

From this total, one may draw an average of twelve national holidays for the country at large. What the northern, eastern and western states consider a national holiday is not always considered so by the South. Washington's birthday is everywhere observed, but by many Southern states the birthday of Lincoln is absent from the holiday calendar. Instead, Lee's birthday on January 19 is honored, and that of Jefferson Davis on June 3. Shrove Tuesday is more generally designated as a holiday by the legislatures of the South than the North. Jefferson's birthday on April 13 is already on many of the Southern calendars, though as yet on none of those in Northern states.

No Disagreement.
Independence day, Washington's birthday, Labor day, Columbus day, Decoration day, the Armistice, Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's—on these there seems to be no disagreement among the states. In the request for more days on which to honor our national heroes, other countries read an interesting phase of American character. We do so much rushing about over here, are invariably geared at such a high speed that foreigners may well conclude we need more holidays than they do. England is easy-going throughout the year, so only needs eight. Italy can worry along with ten official holidays, though of course, the realm is honey-combed with local fete-days, mostly of a religious nature, and overnight political celebrations. France and Germany, with many more events in history to commemorate, have many more excuses for resting than has the United States, which finds 12 in the year sufficient. Out of 365 days, the average American citizen now has a total of 101 for recreation. Fifty-two of these days are his Sundays, 26 of them his Saturday afternoons. The remaining number includes 12 holidays and an allowance of 11 days for his annual vacation, this figure excluding his two usual Sundays and Saturday afternoons off.

Veterans on Pension List Drop 6,464 in 6 Months
Washington.—War veterans on government pension rolls, exclusive of the World war, decreased in number during the last six months from 522,007 to 515,543, the Interior department announced recently, the figures representing a reduction of 6,464. Civil war pensioners decreased by 10,631, but Spanish-American war veterans increased by 8,804 and those of the Indian war increased by three. Only 18 veterans of the Mexican war remain on the rolls. Although no veterans of the War of 1812 are on the list, there still remain 22 widow pensioners of this conflict, compared with 30 six months ago. Pensioners of the regular army service increased, 13 soldiers and 43 widows being added to the rolls.

SIDELIGHTS ON EVOLUTION CONTROVERSY

Monkeys, Babies and Pop
Furnish Much of the Entertainment at Trial.

Dayton, Tenn., July 14, (UP).—The Scopes trial may unwittingly be the occasion of dispelling a cherished northern illusion about southern cooking. Those fortunate enough to be boarding with private families are all right, but in the town's lunch rooms fresh vegetables seem to be taboo and everything gets a coat of grease that makes the visitors pray for a speedy end to the trial.

Dogs roam thru the court room during the trial, sniffing about under the benches until some one sends them yelping out with well directed boots.

This is only one sign of the informality at Dayton. Pop bottles are emptied whenever a spectator gets thirsty and the empty bottles go flopping on the floor at unexpected intervals.

Messenger boys wander in and out with that apparent aimlessness peculiar to a messenger boy. The floor is a little of telegraph blanks and crumpled copy paper from the press tables.

Babies are allowed in the court room and they wail unadmonished. Trains roar by every now and then. Vendors hawk "Nice soft cushions ten cents."

The air is blue with smoke in the court room, until the judge's gavel bangs.

The Life of Christ, a motion picture has arrived in town. It advertises itself in much the same manner as the tent shows which pulled up stakes and left here in disgust.

Dayton's first real monkey hit town last night. It was brought from a circus at Atlanta and created a real sensation. It is a young chimpanzee about 2 1/2 feet tall. Dressed as a man and carrying a cane, it was paraded down Main street, with a huge following. Later it was driven around the town in its cage.

The most interested women in the court room are Mrs. Bryan and Mrs. Darrow. Mrs. Bryan, an elderly lady and an invalid, occupies a wheel chair on the prosecutor's side near her husband. Mrs. Darrow has a seat at the defense table next to John T. Scopes.

Now that the jurors are excluded from the court room in order not to get certain arguments they gather around the loud speakers on the outside of the court room and tune in on a bootlegged version, a delicate question in American jurisprudence arises. That is what the Scopes jury did yesterday.

The "Sewing" club of Muhlenberg township held their regular meeting June 30. The roll call was answered by telling one way to increase the membership. Some of the suggestions were as follows: "Telling something about their club," Louise Carpenter; "Invite them to their meetings," Pauline Fullen; "Enter contest," Violet Grice; "Tell about club tour," Florence Hill; "Invite to demonstration," Christena Heeter; "Make good of money to be put in bank" Blanche Heeter.

Six members and one visitor were present. The visitor was Mrs. H. T. Hill.

Christena Heeter and Louise Carpenter are on the demonstrating team for the first year and Violet Grice and Pauline Fullen for the second year work.

The refreshment committee was Blanche Heeter and Florence Hill. They served ice cream, cake and chocolate drops.

The King Snake's Dinner.
A "Companion boy" who lived in Missouri, and who has been reading the paper since he was a little shaver, writes to tell us what he knows about the cannibalistic habits of snakes. As my brothers and I were cocking hay in a clover field, he writes, we found a king snake basking in the July sun; he was too lazy and full to move. Being curious to know what he had devoured, we cut him open. To our astonishment we found that he contained a black snake 28 inches long, more than one inch longer than himself; and inside the black snake we found a mouse and a grasshopper. The head and neck of the black snake were purple and indicated that the king snake had killed it.—Youth's Companion.

SAYS COLDS COST BILLION A YEAR

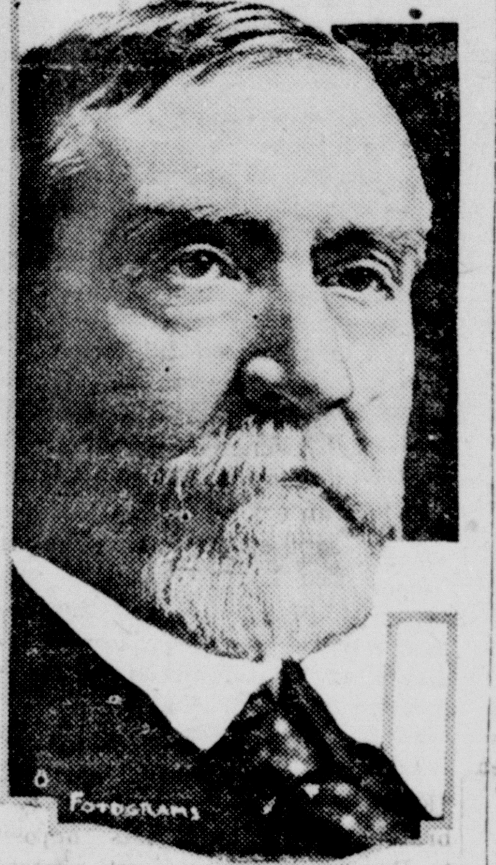

Doctor Declares America Has 100,000,000 of Them.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Dr. Beaman Douglass of New York, in an address before the annual convention of the Laryngological, Rhinological and Otolological society, in the Ambassador hotel here, said there were 100,000,000 colds a year in the United States, causing a loss in time from work of $1,000,000,000, at an average of three days each at $5 a day.

"If we men," he declared, "were to appear on the street in midwinter wearing dancing slippers, silk hose, trousers rolled to our knees and our shirts turned down to the apex of our breastbone, we should most certainly die of pneumonia, but the ladies of today dress that way and yet suffer less from colds than men. This is because the women are out more and become hardened."

Doctor Douglass stated that dry air in homes during the winter is largely responsible for the number of colds. "When a person goes from the open air, with its natural moistness, into his home," he said, "the dry air there makes the membranes of the nose crack and cold bacteria find lodgment, causing a head cold."

WISE MAN FROM WEST

Dr. William W. Peet of Minneapolis, Minn., chairman of the Near East Relief in Constantinople, has sailed for the United States after forty years of philanthropic service in the Near East. He went to Constantinople in 1885 as head of the American Board of Foreign Missions, and has been confidential adviser to every American diplomat in the Near East since the days of Gen. Lew Wallace. Among the natives he was known as the "Wise Man From the West."

Student Economy Causes Oxford Tailors to Close

Oxford, England.—Notwithstanding the rage among Oxford students for "elephant leg" trousers, which are considerably more loose and roomy than the bloomer effect worn by the United States navy sailors, the boys here are buying fewer clothes than formerly. Three long-established tailoring firms, one of which had been in business nearly a century, have gone out of business lately because, it was said, they could not make a living.

The boys haven't got the money they had in other days to spend for clothes, aver the tailors. The students wear knickerbockers a great deal, one or two suits for the season, and cannot afford to have a different suit for every occasion, as a great many did before the war.

James Jail Bird

Los Angeles, Calif.—C. E. Jennings is no fake hypnotist, according to guards at the Los Angeles county jail. Arrested on a check charge, Jennings was placed in a cell. There were several "toughs" in jail and jailers soon noticed these had developed sweet dispositions. Some even hopped and jumped and went to sleep for Jennings, who revealed that several years ago he was the principal in a hypnotism sketch on a vaudeville circuit.

Norfolk Wall Safe Yields Valued Relics

Norfolk, Va.—Two commissions engraved on sheep-skin parchments, the first signed by President John Adams, and the second by President Thomas Jefferson, making Jonathan Cowdery a surgeon's mate and a full surgeon in the United States navy, have been uncovered by Dr. John C. Sleet of this city, who will make an attempt to have the documents restored to their lawful owners. The first commission bears the date of 1800 and the second 1808. The documents include a Masonic diploma from Washington lodge No. 26, making Mr. Cowdery a Master Mason, and another from the Hudson (N. Y.) lodge making him a Mark Master. The papers were found in a steel case hidden in an old brick wall of a house under repairs.

Reasonable
Colonel Roosevelt told a war story at an Albany reception. "A doughboy," he said, "had just got back home from the war, and he was lunching in a cafeteria when a dear old lady in the next chair to his own leaned over across her pie and said: 'I, too, have a soldier son, young man, and a lucky one at that. Would you believe it? My boy went through the war without a scratch.' 'Gee, lady,' said the doughboy, 'spill us the name of his insect powder, will ye?'"

True Progress
The only progress which is really effective depends not upon the bounty of nature but upon the energy of man. —Buckle.

A System of Farming That Brings Health and Prosperity

Every farm, regardless of the method of farming practiced or of the crops raised, should have at least a few good milch cows to provide

- (1) Enough milk, cream and butter for home use;
- (2) Enough skim-milk to raise some calves, pigs and chickens;
- (3) Enough cream or butter to sell to pay, in part or entirely, current living expenses.

This plan has been a "life-saver" for thousands of farmers, especially during the hard times of the past two years. It insures a living, at least, and often other income besides. Such a plan pays best with a De Laval Cream Separator. It soon pays for itself—and skims cleaner, lasts longer and is easier to operate and clean than any other.

Incubator Useful in Hatching Geese

Machines Have Gradually
Come Into Use Where
Fowls Are Raised.

For many years after incubators
came into general practice they were
not used for the hatching of geese, but
they have gradually come into use
where geese are raised in large numbers. The general requirements for successful incubation of hen's eggs are needed in hatching geese eggs. In addition the majority of operators believe that they require more drying
out in the early part of the hatch and
more cooling than hen's eggs.

Required Temperature.

The temperature required does not
need to be so high but no change
needs to be made in this regard if the
eggs are given more cooling. During
the last part of the hatch it is generally necessary to supply moisture.
Some advocate dipping the eggs, others
sprinkling and others supplying the
moisture to the machine. One of the main reasons for the need of additional moisture at that time is so that
the shell and membranes will not stick
to the gosling when it is trying to get
out of the shell.

Some adjustments will need to be made in the thermometer as the thickness of the goose eggs will place them
higher in the incubator and therefore
in a slightly higher temperature unless
an allowance is made for it. An inch
in height will usually make a difference of a degree in the temperature.

Hatch Slow Under Hens.

Goslings will hatch out slower under hens or in an incubator than under geese. However, where attention is paid to proper cooling of the eggs and
a proper supply of moisture, there
should be no trouble in getting a successful hatch. The beginner will sometimes become uneasy over this delay in getting out of the shell and attempt to help the goslings. This should not be done except in occasional cases
where one or more goslings are much
later than the others in hatching.
Even then extreme care should be taken in removing the shell bit by bit
and stopping at the least indication of bleeding. Usually the bird that cannot
get out of the shell is not worth saving
and if the goslings are given plenty
of time and are supplied with moisture so that the material of the shell
will not stick to the body, the big majority will come out successfully.

Wide Market Opened for Capons of High Quality

On the Eastern market buyers are
bidding from 30 to 35 cents per pound
for capons. This opens up a wide
market for breeders of heavy chick-
ens. Capons are making strong competition for turkeys on many of the
markets on account of the high quality of their meat. Then, too, some consumers want a larger bird than the
ordinary fowl.

The capon is more easily raised on
most farms than turkeys. The birds
grow rapidly and the caponizing operation is not difficult to learn. The instruments can be purchased from $2.50 up, depending largely upon how
much nickel plating there is on the instruments. The cheaper sets will do
the work in a satisfactory manner and
will last if they are given proper attention.

A capon will usually grow two
pounds heavier than if left in the natural state. The selling price is considerably stronger so that the total returns are generally from three to four
times that of ordinary cockerels sold
on the market. There does not seem to be much danger of an oversupply
of capons, so that it forms a market
outlet that a good many breeders
should seriously consider.

Fowls Need Protein to Keep on Producing Eggs

Many farm flocks get little or no
protein in the winter and as a result
are overfat and make a poor production. Farm hens are often given a whole carcass to feed in one month
and no meat the next. As a result they
are thrown out of condition and often
are poisoned by spoiled meat.

There are three ways in which animal protein can be secured. A steady supply is essential. Rabbits or dead
farm animals when available can be
cooked and ground or chopped up,
dried and put in a box where hens can eat when they want. Skim milk or buttermilk can be put to no more profitable use on the farm than in producing winter eggs. Where a box of meat
or a supply of milk are available all of
the time, it may not be necessary to
put meat scraps in the mash, but if there is a shortage of these it will pay
to buy meat scraps.

Road Pushes on Campaign for Efficiency and Peace

Roads rule the world—not kings nor congresses, not courts nor constables,
not ships nor soldiers. The road is the only royal line in a democracy, the
only legislature that never changes,
the only court that never sleeps, the
only army that never quits, the first
aid to the redemption of any nation,
the exodus from stagnation in any society, the call from savagery in any
tribe, the high priest of prosperity,
after the order of Malchisedec, with-
out beginning of days or end of life.
The road is omnipresent in every war,
and when the new map is made, it simply
pushes on its great campaign of help,
hope, brotherhood, efficiency and
peace.

Three news items of the year 1925 seemed of slight importance as they appeared separately in print, but they became almost startling when grouped. The British Governor of Burma rode 134 miles through a dense jungle in a vain effort to induce the Naga tribes to give up their human sacrifices. A French official in New Guinea found several villages where cannibalism prevailed. And in Nepal the Maharajah has set aside a large sum to eradicate slavery in his dominions.

It was not so many years ago that slavery was abolished in this country, but cannibalism and human sacrifice seem to belong to the very dawn of history. It seems almost incredible that they should have persisted into an age when civilization has rid itself of so many old cruelties.

The items are painful reminders of the slowness with which progress is made. And they are reminders, too, that this globe in which we live is not quite so small a place and so thoroughly explored as some have imagined. There are no new continents to find, but there is still opportunity for the adventurous. There are some queer places left for the men and women who dare venture a little aside from the beaten trails in Africa and Asia and some of the great islands in the Pacific.—Boston Post.

WID GIVES LOW DOWN ON MOVIES

Talking to Gloria Swanson the other night and was surprised to learn that she's almost through with a new movie. That girl's one of the most likeable personalities in the game. She's not only a real artist but she's got a lotta good plain common sense that keeps her feet on the ground and makes it possible to think in commercial terms of the box office. Incidentally that very boyish bob is very becoming.

Much was expected of Georgia

Hale, the young lady who had the supreme opportunity of recent years when Chaplin slipped her into "The Gold Rush" after the present Mrs. Chaplin had been removed because of marriage, the coming of an heir, a threatened lawsuit and other trifles. Miss Hale missed her chance. Charlie gave her some marvelous scenes to do and truly the opportunities were magnificent, but she didn't "click" as the saying goes and so hundreds of young ladies in Hollywood can rightfully say, "Oh, if I had only been given a shot at that part." Well, it's all in a lifetime. Maybe some other year, girls.

Story of the Built-Well Home (CHAPTER 2)

Upon the foundation goes the frame-work. Of course everybody knows this; but the frame must be of such size and character as will properly carry any load required governed by the expanse.

A good grade of No. 1 common joist are being used in this home. They are spaced only 16 inches apart which will make very firm floors as the expanse is not great. This is where in cheap building an inferior grades of material is often used as it will later all be covered. Also some of the timber that should properly be used is left out or spaced too far apart, thus weakening the strength of the building. These are the class of buildings that usually go over in a wind storm or sag and become crooked soon after being built.

We are Building a Good Frame In Our Built-Well Home.

On the joist we are laying a good sound sheathing lumber eight inches in width on which will later be laid a hardwood finished floor.

It has been the custom to sheath the outside walls of good homes with No. 2 boards, but here we introduce an innovation.

The Walls of the Built-Well Home are to be Sheathed with Celetex or Insulating Lumber as it is called.

This will brace the building more than boards besides really making the house cooler in Summer and warmer in Winter. We are determined to have the most comfortable home in Circleville both Winter and Summer, and with the least consumption of ice in Summer and coal in Winter.

This Celetex is now being applied and we hope our friends will see it and ask us any questions they like about it.

Next week more will be told of this wonderful insulating lumber and please remember that Celetex is in stock at the yards of the Pickaway County Lumber Company, East Main Street.

Many Wedded Students Succeed in University

Denver, Colo.—That wives are an aid and not a drawback on grades is evidenced by the neat appearance of the law students' notebooks, according to an article in the Denver Clarion of the University of Denver.

"A married man," the article reads, "in an English university is rare, one in a high school in America is usually suspended, and men who take brides while attending American universities are few. Accordingly, when a freshman enters the law school at Denver he is somewhat astonished when he learns how many of its students are married."

It has been found that out of 100 students who now attend law school 27 have stood at the matrimonial altar. The seniors have been there most frequently. Out of a class of 35, 14 have wives. The junior class, numbering about 35, boasts of 9 married, while 4 of a freshman class of 30 have become husbands.

"LOST" TARS FOUND FOR ANXIOUS KIN

Seamen's Institute Locates
1,905 in Five Years.

New York.—Every seaport town or city has its "port of missing men." It is a common thing for seamen to drop out of sight thereby causing anxiety to friends and relatives. This is true especially of seamen who sail on roving commissions, changing from vessel to vessel and shipping anew from port to port. Yet few of these lost seamen go down with their ships. A large majority of them are simply lost because being a happy-go-lucky lot they neglect to keep their friends informed of their whereabouts.

So many inquiries concerning lost seamen came to the Seamen's Church Institute at 25 South street that in January, 1920, the institute found it advisable to establish a "missing men's department," and the work of locating such men has been intrusted to Mrs. Janet Roper, who is known to followers of the sea in every port however remote and small in the world. She is the house mother of the institute and to hundreds of seamen of many nationalities she is affectionately known as "Mother."

The institute receives about 100 inquiries a month concerning seamen for whom anxiety is felt. And these inquiries are gaining in number because the work of the missing department has been increasing to such an extent that it has become international in scope. Letters are received frequently from distant ports and inland villages of Europe asking for news of rovers of the Seven Seas. Some of these communications come from Holland and Great Britain, and many from parents of American boys from country towns and hamlets.

Inquiries in Every Port.

As soon as these communications are received the work of looking up the absent ones begins. Each month the institute publishes a bulletin of men reported as missing, and these bulletins go to every port in the world. The various foreign consulates in the city which receive inquiries requesting them to locate this or that man send such inquiries to the institute if the man is a seaman. And seamen themselves assist in trying to locate the whereabouts of members of their fraternity.

From June to October the institute gives a series of concerts and entertainments and at these affairs the names of missing men are flashed upon a screen. Since there are usually between 500 and 600 men who follow the sea for a livelihood at these entertainments, the bulletins on the screen are read in the course of a month by many seamen.

At one of these concerts a man saw his name flashed among the missing. After the entertainment he sought Mrs. Roper and confided to her that his brother might be looking for him. He said that 17 years ago he had said good-by to his brother at the Battery. He was about to embark on a cruise and he liked the sea so well that he had shipped on other cruises. When he returned he was unable to find his brother or any trace of his whereabouts. Mrs. Roper finally located his missing brother in Oakland, Cal.

When a letter is received from an anxious mother or relative the letter is acknowledged.

Found His Mother.

A youth appealed to the American consul in a foreign city to help him find his mother, who had been lost to him for four years. The institute was asked to help locate the mother. After much work the mother was found. She was in destitute circumstances. The youth, who was earning a good livelihood, was overjoyed at finding her. Other youths feel the urge of the sea and run away from home, not realizing the anxiety they cause their parents. On becoming remorseful they write to their parents, only to discover that they have moved from their former home, without leaving a forwarding address behind.

The foregoing are some of the reasons that cause seamen to lose trace of their families. Seamen forget to write home. Others leave home in a pique. Two brothers had a falling out over the possession of a shirt and lost sight of each other during the late war. At the conclusion of the war they made an effort to find each other but without success. Both of them were seamen and when the institute was appealed to it discovered that they had been living within four city blocks of each other. For some reason neither had happened to encounter the other on the street. They were delighted at being brought together again. They had been lost to each other for a year.

Another instance was that of a boy who was to enter a school. He had a secret yearning for the sea and he decided that it, despite his mother's opposition, promised more lively adventure than the somber schoolroom. He made up his mind to run away on the day he was to begin his studies. He was big for his age and he managed to get a job on a ship. He had not been at sea long when he was found by the institute and returned to his mother. He found more work than adventure on the sea and he was only too glad to return to his mother and his studies. His case is typical of others.

Since it was established the "missing men's department" has located 1,905 men reported as missing. Among this number were captains, mates, engineers, carpenters and ordinary seamen. They belonged to all nationalities.
